Clara Schumann was born in 1819 in Leipzig, Germany.

Clara became one of her father’s students and studied composition, piano, voice, and violin.

Clara had her first compositions published when she was 13 years old.

Clara Schumann married another pianist and composer named Robert Schumann.

Clara and Robert had 7 children but she continued writing and playing music while raising her children.

Robert Schumann died very young and Clara moved to Berlin after his death.

Clara Schumann and Johannes Brahms fell in love but they never got married.

Clara introduced many of her husband’s compositions to the public after his death.

During Clara’s lifetime, writing music was considered a job for men.

Robert Schumann demanded complete silence in the house while he was composing.

Clara’s music is performed more today than it was during her lifetime.

Clara Schumann’s music is simple and melodic.

Clara was one of the first pianists to play her concerts from memory.

Clara Schumann’s career lasted almost 60 years.